The causes and resultant changes that will grow from the GFC (Global Financial Crises) that has engulfed the field of Applied Economy are vast and resoundingly imperative. There has never been a more critical time in contemporary economic history to understand the frameworks and resultant impacts our financial, philosophical, and moral actions will have on the economy. It is clear that errors in judgment and the application of economic theory have been made. Nothing is more important than rectifying these mistakes to avoid a similar conundrum in the future. In this Volume of "The Journal of Applied Economy" we hope to identify the philosophical and somatic reasons for our failures.
