They were either too conceited about their looks or were into sports or the money that they made on a daily basis. She lived her life in a minimalist kind of way, not really caring about monetary gain and only making enough to survive. Anything over that, she would give to charity and this is when she meets Paul Winchester. He is an over privileged rich kid that has more money than brains. They don't like each other, but it's a fine line between love and hate. After much soul searching, she convinces him that his money should be used for a more humanitarian cause. She surprises him by her love of animals and that is the one thing that they have in common.
